

Disney, Tarot, and the Growing Fascination with Demons

by Jeremy James

It is a mark of how little attention most Christians give to the literal truth of the Bible that they ignore, or greatly downplay, what it says about demons and the malign influence they can have on their victims. They seem to forget how many times the New Testament records the casting out of demons and the immense relief it brought to the liberated individual. If one is speaking about a specific type of healing in the New Testament, then healing from demon possession must surely be one of the most frequent.

The Seventy who were sent by Jesus to towns and villages across Galilee to preach the kingdom of God and “heal the sick” (Luke 10:9) reported to him on their return. It would seem the miracle that impressed them most was the casting out of demons:

“And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.” (Luke 10:17)

The Pharisees, too, were greatly impressed by this type of miracle and even asserted that Jesus must have had assistance from Satan to evict demons, especially the powerful kind that rendered the victim dumb (This may have included deafness from childhood, which left no opportunity to learn a language). Jesus firmly rejected their accusation, reminding his critics that Satan would never be able to maintain order in his kingdom if he allowed his servants to be cast out. The Lord told them, rather, that this wonderful healing was performed “with the finger of God”:

“But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.” (Luke 11:20)

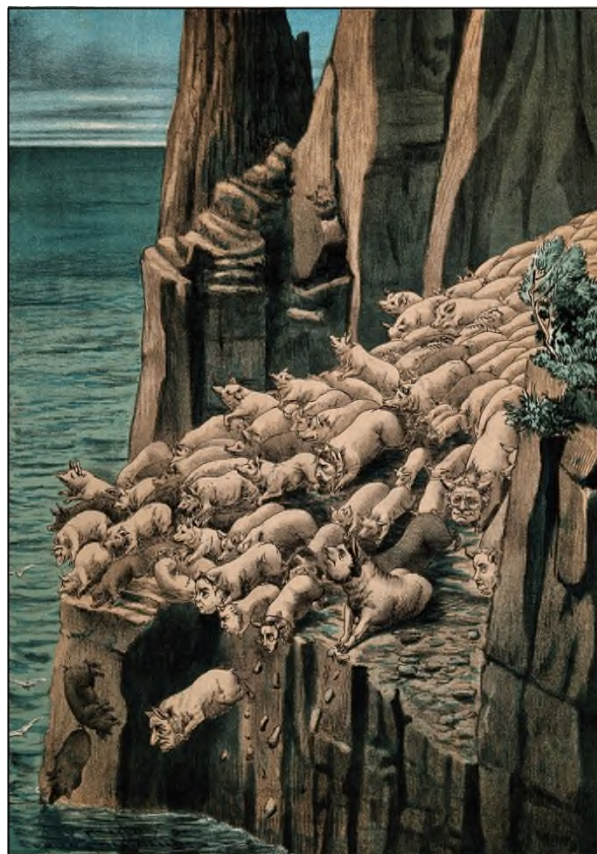

The audience knew that the miracle consisted, not just in the restoration of the victim’s faculty of hearing and utterance, but his acquisition of the ability to speak intelligibly and to understand language, something he could never previously do:

“And when the devil was cast out, the dumb spake: and the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel.”
(Matthew 9:33)

News of this remarkable, life-changing miracle must have spread widely across Israel and into the bordering regions. For example, we are told of the Syro-Phoenician woman – a Gentile living in the pagan land of Sidon and Tyre – implored Jesus to rid her daughter of the demon that tormented her (“my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil.” – Matthew 15:22).

The case of the naked, demon-possessed man living among the tombs in the land of the Gadarenes was so severe that, when the demons were driven out, there were enough of them to terrorize a herd of two thousand swine and cause them to drown in the Sea of Galilee.

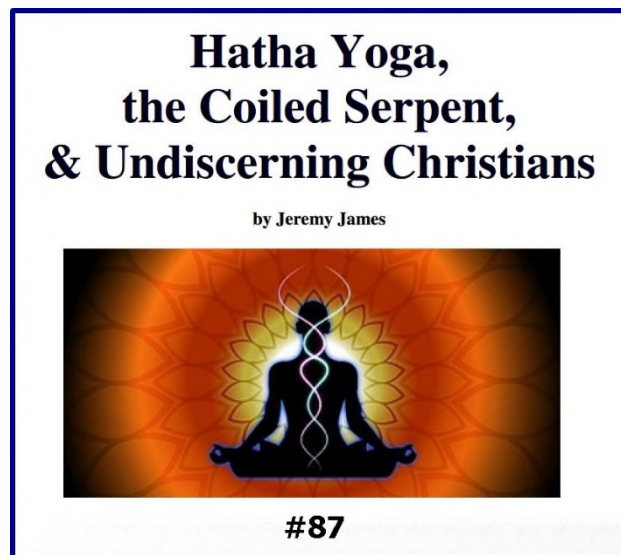

The Word of God would not contain such graphic and dramatic instances of demonic oppression were this phenomenon not a common occurrence in Israel. And if it was common in Israel, it must have been just as prevalent elsewhere.

Modern psychiatry is designed to hide demonic oppression

Modern psychiatry has greatly disguised the extent to which it afflicts society today. The role of demons in causing or aggravating mental illness is dismissed, and purely organic and environmental causes are assigned instead. In this way the Enemy hides the extent to which his army of unclean spirits is at work in the world. The addict is just an addict, a compulsive person they say, and not a person tormented by a demonic entity. The alcoholic just happens to have a 'substance abuse' issue, not a demon. The promiscuous homosexual with scores of 'partners' is simply deemed reckless or irresponsible, and not someone whose lust is stimulated again and again by an unclean spirit. The person who covers his body with garish tattoos is considered 'creative' or 'expressive' but not the victim of an entity urging him to return again and again to the tattoo parlor and defile his body even more.

An earlier paper in this series.

All of this is demonic or driven to some extent by a demonic element. So, when liberal commentators and medical experts claim that 'demonism' is a myth, they are deliberately ignoring the evidence. They have given it another name and hidden its true underlying character.

It is not our aim in this paper to catalogue the various ways a demon, or a team of demons, can afflict us, harm us, or draw us further from God. Up to 1700 or so, Europeans had a good general awareness of the threat that Satan posed to mankind. Over the course of the 18th century, the so-called 'Enlightenment' was announced by the leading philosophers and academics. This was a way of interpreting the world in mechanical terms and downplaying or eliminating non-material considerations. The divine or supernatural dimension of human experience was slowly pushed aside. This new way of seeing things, this humanistic paradigm, was taken up and promoted with great enthusiasm in newspapers, journals, and popular literature.

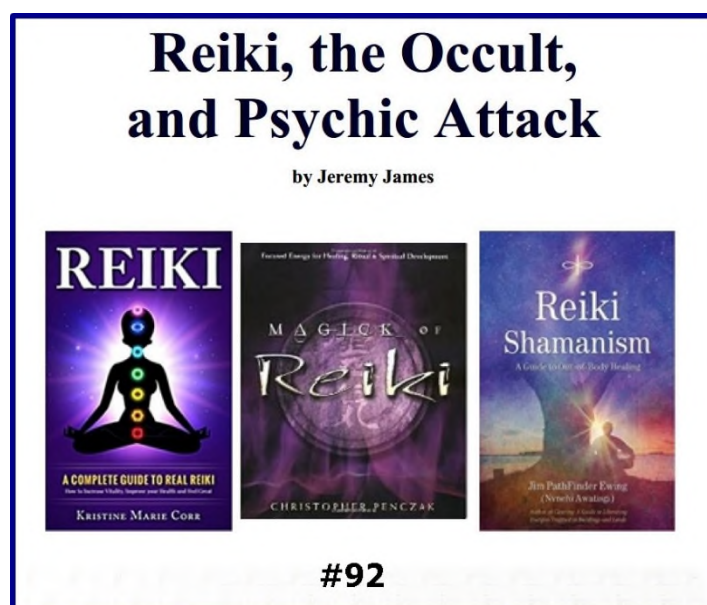

How Satan hides himself

Over a period of a hundred years or so the Enemy succeeded in convincing most of society that he didn't exist or, if he did, that his role in our lives was remote or largely theoretical. This was a remarkable achievement. He was concealing his existence behind a wall of myths, psychology, superstition, dreams, delusions, and old wives' tales. It was no longer deemed rational to ascribe to him the powers or the objectives described in the Bible. The only enemy that man faced, allegedly, was his ignorance of the laws on which the universe ran. And this could be remedied by science and a minute empirical exploration of the material world.

By concealing himself in this way he also concealed the legion of demons who worked in his complex hierarchical organization.

His next task was to reintroduce his demonic hoard to mankind under a new guise. In the course of the 19th century he created the Spiritualist movement, which was designed to convince society, especially the bereaved, that the souls of the dead could communicate with loved ones. He also got the aristocratic families of Europe to believe in a magnetic healing power called Mesmerism, named after Anton Mesmer, the man who held impressive soirees for the elite in which seemingly miraculous healings took place.

Mesmerism was a potent form of hypnotism, which led in turn to the use of hypnotism for medical purposes. As a result a significant proportion of the ruling class across Europe underwent hypnotic therapy. This led to the advent of psychiatry where the intellectuals of Europe were trained to believe that one's soul was really the subconscious and that hypnotism and other forms of intervention, such as dream analysis, would "cure" all forms of mental illness.

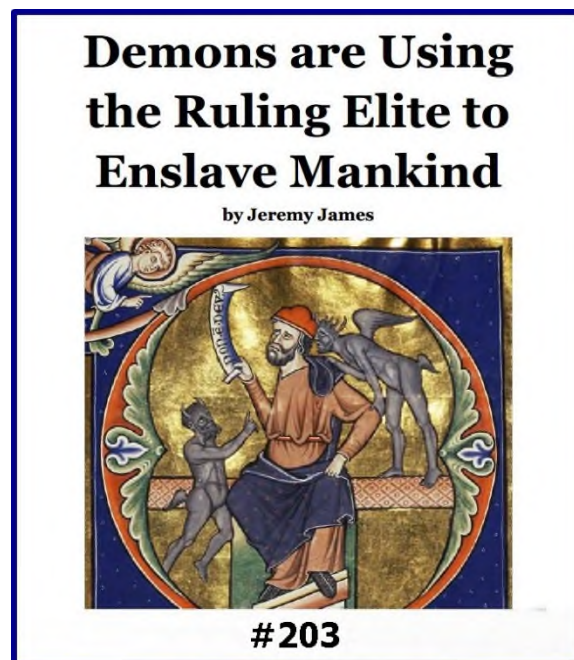

Our earlier paper on the demonic aspect of Reiki.

It is often forgotten that Freud discovered that many of his neurotic and unstable patients had suffered sexual abuse as children. Rather than expose the prevalence of this crime in high society, he devised a theory which dismissed these memories as fantasies generated by a previously undiscovered form of erotic curiosity in children. This massive lie was perpetuated successfully across the entire psychiatric profession so that, for decades, highly placed pedophiles could continue to prey on their victims without any risk of exposure. The trauma of sexual abuse in childhood frequently opens the vulnerable victims to demonic oppression and allows their weakened psychic state to be exploited by those in authority.

We are going over this aspect of history in order to show that Satan has been operating a strategy from 1800 or so which opens doors to demonic activity without attracting too much attention. The victims themselves are generally unable to diagnose their condition or recognize what is happening to them.

Science fiction literature was part of this strategy, enabling the Enemy to instill ideas and future scenarios in the mind of the public which had no basis in reality. This began to gather pace with the publication of Journey to the Center of the Earth in 1864 by Jules Verne (Verne is one of the most translated authors in the world, second only to Agatha Christie.) In just a few decades much of the population of Europe and America believed in 'outer space' and were prepared to speculate on the possible existence of alien life and 'other civilizations'. This new concept, the existence of alien beings, would later provide a very convincing cover for demonic activity.

The strategy developed included at least four ways to cover up the role of demonic beings or unclean spirits in human affairs: (a) hypnotism; (b) mental illness; (c) departed loved ones; and (d) aliens. The rise of Theosophy, based on the writings of Helena Blavatsky and Alice Bailey, introduced another way, (e) the spirit guide (or 'ascended master').

The New Age movement

The New Age movement was a detailed program of indoctrination devised in the 1960s by the RAND Corporation and Stanford Research Institute, among others. By presenting pagan and Hindu philosophy to the public in a disguised form, it was designed to introduce unwitting enquirers to new modalities and practises that would 'expand their awareness'. These altered states of consciousness, as they were called, were really the perceived effects on one's mind and emotions of supernatural interference.

The recommended techniques included yoga, meditation, the use of psychedelic drugs, astrology, geomancy (divination using pendulums, coins, etc), bizarre diets and fasting, self-isolation, past-life regression, self-hypnosis, astral travel, crystal healing, numerology, lucid dreaming, sexual experimentation, and the use of Tarot cards. (For some reason the Ouija Board was never a standard tool of the New Age movement, possibly because it had been around for several decades and was already known to open practitioners to psychic attacks.)

The huge interest today in Tarot

Of the various techniques described, the one we wish to concentrate on is the use of Tarot cards. Christians have long been aware that the use of Tarot cards for divination is absolutely forbidden in the Bible. So why address this as a separate topic? There are several reasons for this:

1. The Enemy is gradually redefining the supposed purpose of Tarot cards. Rather than offering them as a means of foretelling the future (fortune telling), they are presented instead as a way of studying the present. The better we understand our existing circumstances, it is alleged, the more likely we are to make decisions that will benefit us in the future. By framing Tarot as a diagnostic tool rather than a tool of divination, a Christian may assume the Biblical prohibition (Deuteronomy 18) does not apply.

2. Science fiction movies and speculative documentaries about time and space have given young people a very elastic understanding of how the universe works. Many think the future is moulded in part by our perception, or even our imagination. As a result they think a tool like Tarot enables someone to imagine a better future for himself and shape his own reality.
3. Tarot cards are being marketed in a great variety of ways today. The traditional deck (the so-called Rider-Waite deck), which was first published by the Rider company in 1909, was designed by A.E Waite and Pamela Colman Smith, both members of the Luciferian cult known as the Golden Dawn. Many of the images used in that deck have featured in movies, TV series, and fantasy books. They are recognizably 'occult'. However Tarot decks are now appearing in bookshops and elsewhere with graphics that are much more innocent looking. (We will give examples later.)

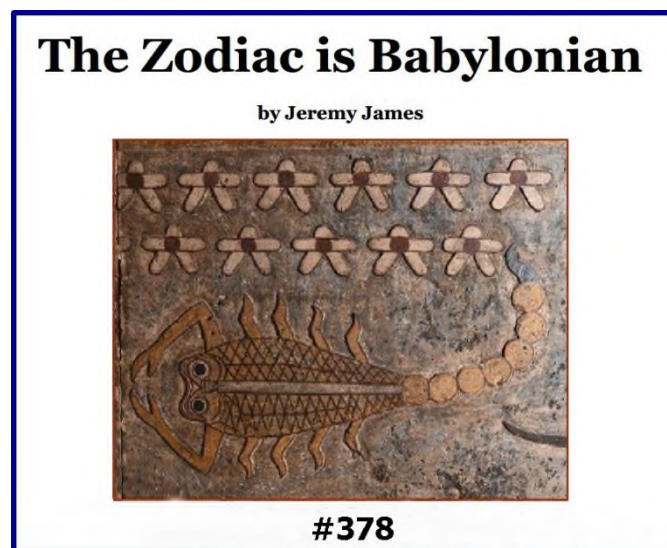

4. Young people are already being conditioned to collect other kinds of cards which are perceived to be valuable or 'rare'. This is certainly the case with Dungeons & Dragons, an overtly occult board game that uses 'magical' cards, and Pokémon, a card franchise aimed at children. After a few years of collecting such cards, a young person may be attracted to cards that promise to confer a personal supernatural advantage on the owner/player. If a person is already convinced that life itself is a cosmic game which operates in accordance with set rules, then he or she will be attracted to esoteric card games (and board games) that purport to incorporate these rules in some way.
5. The immense popularity of the Harry Potter books and movies has convinced many young people, and even their parents, that there are two kinds of magic, one good and one evil. This brings with it the belief that what matters in all such activities is one's intentions. They believe that if we act out of love or genuine concern for the welfare of another when we use an occult technique, then we are not causing offense to God. But this is a lie. When we call on the supernatural in any manner, we are violating God's Word and putting ourselves in harm's way.

6. Another major trend today is the huge surge in online gaming. This is conditioning and reinforcing the mental habits of young people, making them more susceptible to the Matrix-type worldview that dominates in the occult. Tarot is rigorously fate-based. A cosmos based on Astral forces operates in accordance with impersonal laws. The magus or high-ranking occult practitioner claims he has studied these laws and learned how to take advantage of the opportunities that are hidden throughout the Matrix.

Astrology and Tarot

Astrology and Tarot are closely related. Astrology is a mechanical activity where the movements of planets and stars are charted to determine how the astral forces of the universe are operating at a given moment in time. Some configurations are deemed to be auspicious and any enterprise begun at that time is believed to turn out well for the individual. Equally, an inauspicious configuration is a sign that a planned activity should be abandoned or deferred.

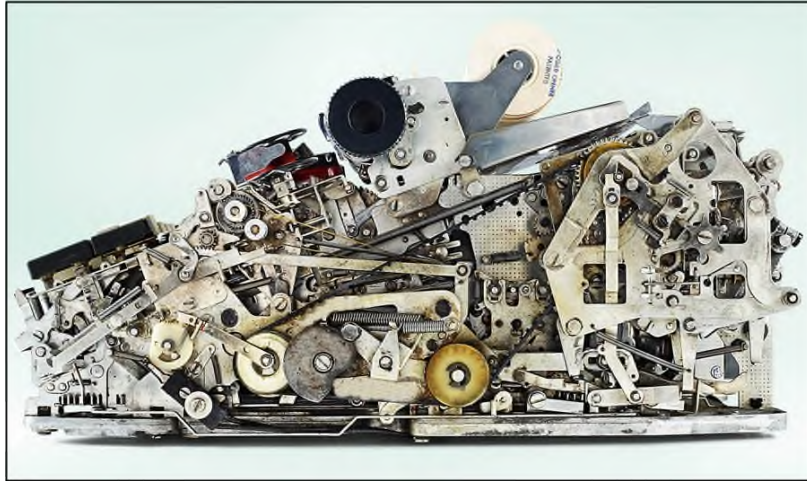

The Illuminati attach great importance to Astrology and are very particular about the timing of important events in their program to introduce a 'new world order'. This model of the universe, where wheels are turning within wheels, much like a gigantic mechanical device, has been the dominant cosmological model in the occult since the days when Nimrod ruled Babylon.

Tarot is based on the same model. The wheels of fate grind down anyone who doesn't understand how they work. The illuminated ones, however, use Astrology and the Tarot to see into the future and plan accordingly. They believe the configuration of the cards on the table, like the charts used in Astrology, reflect exactly how the universe is ordered at a given moment in time. So, when a card reader deals out the Tarot cards to read one's fortune, she (it is usually a woman) is using this 'snapshot' of reality or 'fate' to see what impact it will have on the querent (the person who requested the reading).

The First Commandment

Any young person who has spent hours every day gaming online has already been conditioned to see the world around him in a strictly rule-bound mechanical way. The most successful players are those who understand the rules and patterns and are able to act quickly to exploit their opportunities.

The Monroe mechanical calculator, built in 1964

Tarot reading promotes a pagan view of the world, where God is neither sovereign nor absolute, where the universe is cold and impersonal, and where only the fit survive and triumph. In short, it is the worldview that Satan wants everyone to have.

This is why the First Commandment must govern all our thoughts and actions. In the Old Testament man was commanded to worship God only and to have no association whatever with any other supernatural being (or ‘god’). Our Lord Jesus expressed this truth as follows: “thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.” (Mark 12:30)

This tells us how to obey the First Commandment. But anyone who uses Tarot has turned his back on God’s sovereignty. He no longer trusts God to watch over him and lead him safely along the path of righteousness. Even if the Word of God did not record the prohibition against divination, we would know it was deeply sinful because it violates the First Commandment.

This violation exposes us to the risk we all face when we turn elsewhere for guidance. The First Commandment expressly refers to “other gods”. In other words, by looking elsewhere for guidance we are inviting a supernatural force (demons) to enter our life. We may not do this knowingly, but we have issued an invitation.

It is probably fair to say that, 99 times out of 100, a person who uses Tarot for the first time has absolutely no idea that he is calling on another ‘god’ or demon. He thinks of Tarot merely as a mechanical technique, not realizing that he has broken the First Commandment and sought from another source something that only God knows, namely the future.

Satan does not know the future. Neither do any of his senior demons. Whatever they know about you personally has been gleaned from observation. Using that information, along with information about those in your wider circle, they are able to make ‘predictions’ that often sound convincing.

Cursed objects

Tarot decks themselves are cursed objects. This means that the moment they are made, the manufacturer or someone close to the production process has called on Satan to send a demon to track each deck. The curse is the demon. Then, when the buyer brings the deck home and places it on a shelf in his living room, he has literally given a demon permission to reside night and day with him and his family.

We must be very careful about what we allow into our homes. The Enemy is constantly on the lookout for ways to gain access, and a cursed object (or person) is one of the most effective. Even after more than thirty years in the New Age, where I had witnessed firsthand on many occasions what demons can do, I still slipped up a couple of times after I came to Christ. My two errors surprised me since I thought I had a trained eye for these things.

On both occasions I had to endure a dreadful psychic attack in my sleep. The battle each time was intense as pairs of demons attacked me and tried to inflict serious injury. Bear in mind, I was a Christian when this happened and had no involvement of any kind with the occult.

In the first instance my daughter invited a new friend to spend the night in our home. Unknown to her, this young woman, who came from China, was heavily infested with demons. I paid little attention to her and failed to see the danger. That night two demons came at me with considerable force and I had to work really hard to repel them. As a young Christian I had not yet learned how to wear my spiritual armor in a disciplined way and to wield my sword as I should.

On the second occasion I was sent a present by an old friend living in Japan. It was a simple wooden figurine, not unlike a child's toy. I placed it on a shelf in my bedroom, not realizing that it was a cursed object. That night two demons launched a violent assault against me, using martial arts and other violent means to harm me. After a long battle, where I was pressed to the limit, they finally gave up and left.

Perhaps the LORD wanted me to learn a hard lesson. These experiences gave me a much better understanding of the way Satan tries to insinuate himself into our lives. We take so much for granted and forget the price that Jesus paid on Calvary to set us free from demonic control. Truly he came “to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound” (Isaiah 61:1)

Freedom in Christ

Everyone on earth, who is not born-again in Christ, is bound in some way by Satan. This is not something the average person likes to hear. They refuse to believe they are his prisoners and that they will remain under his spell until they accept the gift of salvation that Jesus earned on our behalf. For most captives it is an open prison, where the inmates can wander about to some degree and imagine they are free. This suits Satan perfectly since he can then concentrate his limited forces on prize targets like churches, evangelists, and all who carry light into this dark world:

“Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. And the servant abideth not in the house for ever: but the Son abideth ever. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.”

(John 8:34-36)

We must purge our home of all objects that offend God. There is nothing puritanical about this! This law exists for our spiritual protection and well-being.

We don't accept gifts from strangers or collect objects whose origin is unknown to us.

A nephew told me of his experience with tattoos. For years he had begged his parents to let him get one. Finally, when he came of age and could make that decision for himself, he got a tattoo that covered his forearm. Later he warned his cousins to think carefully before doing the same. He said his tattoo was urging him to get more. He couldn't understand this strange compulsion. He was certain the first tattoo would have satisfied him, but it didn't.

Tarot and occult addiction

Most tattoos come with a demon, an unclean spirit that tempts us over and over to get another one. This desire can become so oppressive that the person gets another one simply to have peace. That ‘peace’ may last a while, but after a few months, say, the pressure starts to build up again.

Practitioners of Tarot often report the same thing, a recurring urge to buy another deck, perhaps one of a slightly different design. As they use the cards to answer questions about their life – whether financial, romantic or whatever – they keep coming back with more questions. It becomes an addiction. This is how unclean spirits trap their victims and bind them more tightly over time.

The Tarot deck itself comprises 78 cards, 22 of which are called the Major Arcana. These relate to the themes affecting one’s life as a whole, while another 56 cards, known as the Minor Arcana, address day-to-day issues. Cards in the Major Arcana have such portentous names as The Magician, The High Priestess, The Emperor, Death, The Tower, and The Hanged Man. The 78 cards are shuffled and, in a typical reading, 10 are dealt in a set pattern known as a ‘spread’. As we noted above, the standard deck is the Rider-Waite, although Aleister Crowley, one of the most high-ranking Satanists of the 20th century, commissioned a special 78-card deck with images that were intended to align better with the occult philosophy channeled through him by a demon or spirit guide who called himself Aiwaz.

Frieda Harris, a close associate of Aleister Crowley, in a studio in London working on the graphics commissioned by Crowley for his new Thoth Tarot deck.

This occult philosophy, known as Thelema, is regarded by many Illuminati as one of the most potent systems of magick. Crowley called his cards the Thoth Deck, after the Egyptian god of wisdom. He is on record as saying that the Tarot is a complete system of philosophy and that its value lies in its adherence to “the Holy Qabalah” (his term).

We can see therefore that the Tarot is used by seasoned practitioners to access the demonic realm described in the Kabbalah, an ancient system of magick that teaches how to summon demons, travel in the ‘higher planes’, and place curses on one’s enemies.

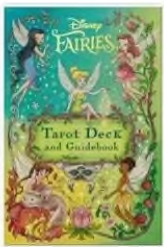

Tarot is therefore a gateway into the occult, into darkness and rebellion, the supernatural world ruled by Lucifer and his fallen angels:

“For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry.” (1 Samuel 15:23)

The many Editions of the Tarot deck

We mention these decks since they are used by high-level occultists, presumably to attract the most powerful demons. We surmise, but we cannot prove, that some decks are more dangerous than others, depending on the level of demonic entity they attract and the kind of esoteric relationship that the demon expects to have with his victim.

This brings us to the ‘Disney’ aspect of our paper. Few people would associate the world of Disney and the Disney Corporation with the occult. Even though its animations from the earliest times incorporated magical themes and ‘good’ witches, they were always presented in a non-threatening, fairytale way. As time went on, however, the storylines became darker. The ‘enchantment’ of the American people, along with many other nations, shifted into a higher gear. Young people were now being offered movies like Hocus Pocus (I and II), Halloweentown and Twitches which glamorized witchcraft and made children wonder what it must be like to be a “good witch”, to master “spellcraft” and exercise magical powers.

More recent Disney movies, such as Maleficent: Mistress of Evil (2019), The Little Mermaid (2023), Snow White (2025), and Hexed (2026) provide a vivid platform for extreme characters practising black magic.

Walt Disney and his successors have probably done more to undermine Christianity in America than any other group of individuals. They are following Satan's plan of steady indoctrination, where demons are first shown as cute and benign characters, and only later acquire powers and a depth of character that foster a fascination with the occult per se. This plan is now moving into a more advanced phase where demons of a certain kind are presented as potential servants or protectors of mankind.

The Disney mass-market Tarot deck, 2021

While it experimented with a limited edition Tarot deck in 2001, Disney released its first mass-market Tarot deck in 2021, called the Disney Villains Tarot Deck. At a time when the entire adult population was locked in their homes or otherwise perplexed and oppressed by the 'Covid' scare, Disney brought out a hands-on product for children, seemingly with little fanfare, that was unashamedly occult.

The Tarot deck that it released was not a toy or a cute copy of a real deck. It was a full working deck in its own right, with all 78 cards – the 22 Major Arcana cards and the four sets of Minor Arcana cards, with all 14 cards in each set (representing Earth, Air, Fire, and Water). The Major Arcana cards have the same names as those used in the Rider-Waite deck. The only difference between the two decks is the use of a different Disney villain to illustrate each card. The four sets of the Minor Arcana follow the same pattern. Here the sets have the same names as Rider-Waite, called Wands, Cups, Swords, and Coins (Some Rider-Waite decks use the name Pentacles instead of Coins).

A seasoned Tarot reader would be able to use the Disney deck without any loss of content. (For a more detailed look at the deck see Appendix A.)

The Disney Villains deck even has its own Guidebook:

“The guidebook, written by Minerva Siegel, is entirely “Disneyfied”, introducing basic tarot concepts cleverly woven into the Disney universe. This modern framing of the tarot aligns with the broader trend of the Modern Esoteric Lifestyle. Disney's approach reflects the younger generations' personal identity, transforming an esoteric and occult practice into a more relatable, mass-consumable product.”

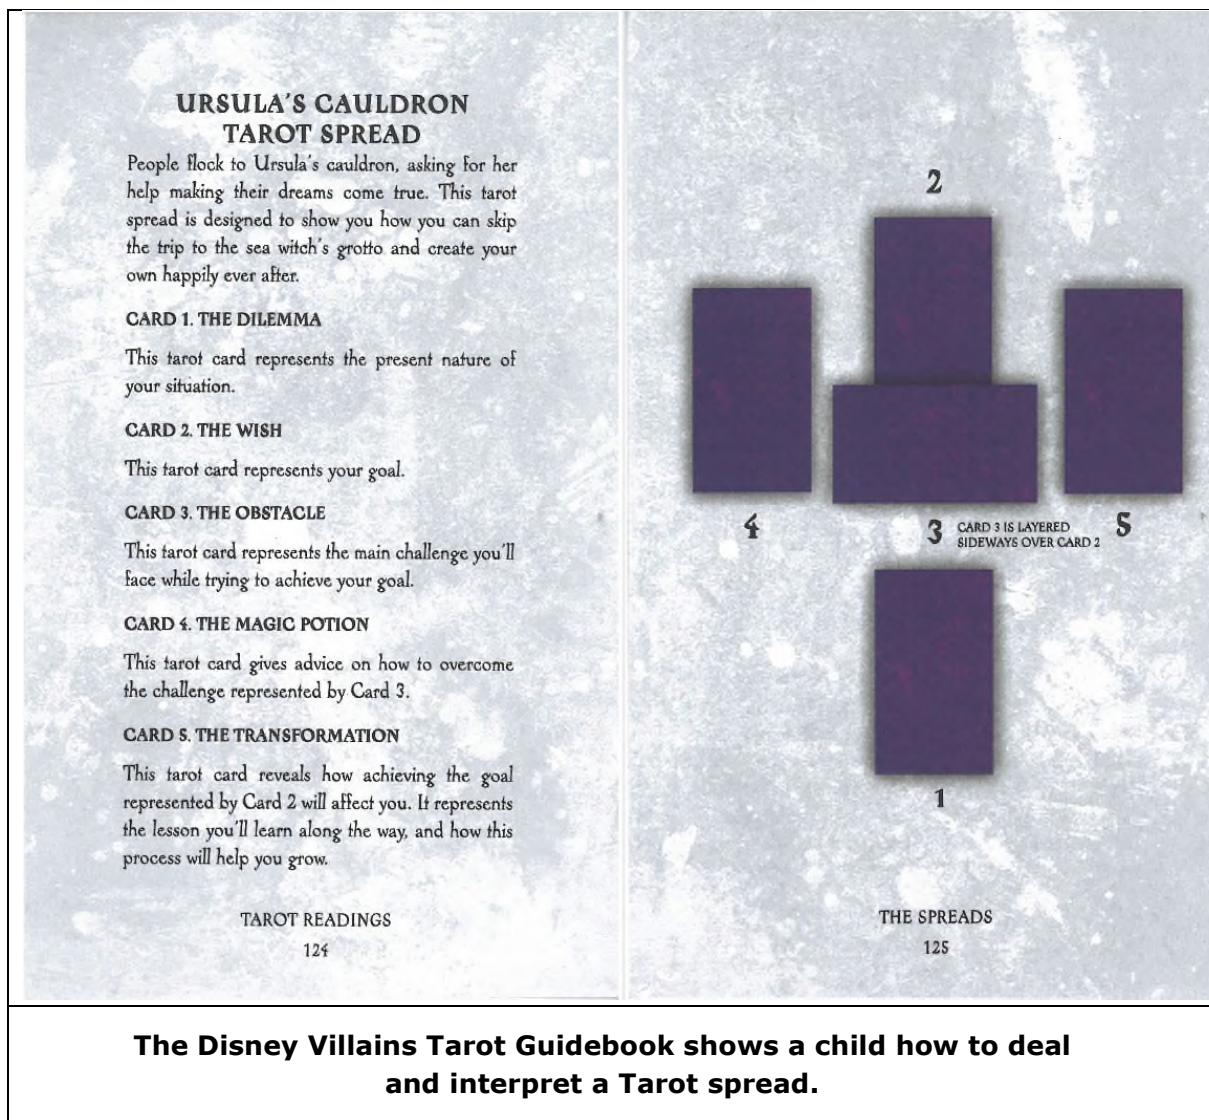

[<https://www.wopc.co.uk/tarot/disney-villains-tarot-deck>]

Comprising 128 pages, the Guidebook gives its young audience a detailed introduction to Tarot and how the cards and their spreads ought to be interpreted. It does this in a language suitable for a novice user, avoiding the more complex aspects of Tarot. The excerpt overleaf shows the lengths to which Disney has gone to ensure the owner – a child! – becomes actively involved in divination and gets “the traditional mystical tarot experience.”

Christians can readily see how depraved this is. It is a work of Satan through and through. The Disney Corporation and their commercial affiliates are now introducing children to hardcore, practical witchcraft. Young and vulnerable minds are being shown what they need to do to contact the supernatural realm, to communicate with invisible entities and enter into a covenant with them.

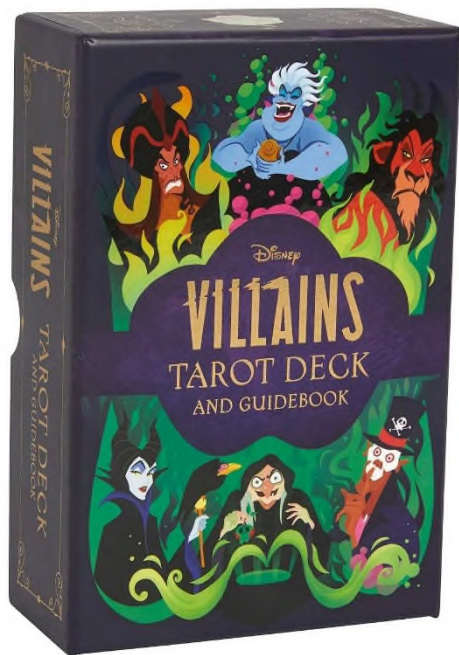

Non-Christians, too, should be able to see that this is dangerous, that children can be harmed by these activities. They should be able to see that Disney has an agenda and that it has nothing to do with the welfare of their children. A corporation that makes staggering profits from marketing a fantasy world for children is now going further and exploiting its fantasy creations to lure children into a dark and dangerous realm.

CONCLUSION

This paper probably has little to teach most Christians, but we hope it can help believers evangelize in their community by alerting non-Christian neighbors and friends to the danger posed by Disney and its Tarot campaign. Many non-Christians know that demons exist and would not want their children 'dabbling' in the occult. They may be very glad to hear the warning about Disney and Tarot. They may even wish to discuss the wider spiritual aspects of divination with you and hear what the Bible teaches about it.

Tarot opens a door to the occult and invites demons to enter. Simply by 'playing' with a Tarot deck, or requesting a reading by a Tarot practitioner, a person is INVITING one or more unclean spirits into his or her life. Without that invitation, the demon has no power or influence over the person, but participation makes all the difference. The Enemy uses all kinds of enticements to induce vulnerable individuals to issue an invitation.

The decks are available on Amazon but not on the Disney Store websites in the US and Europe.

They can also be purchased at the merchandise stores inside Disney Parks and Resorts.

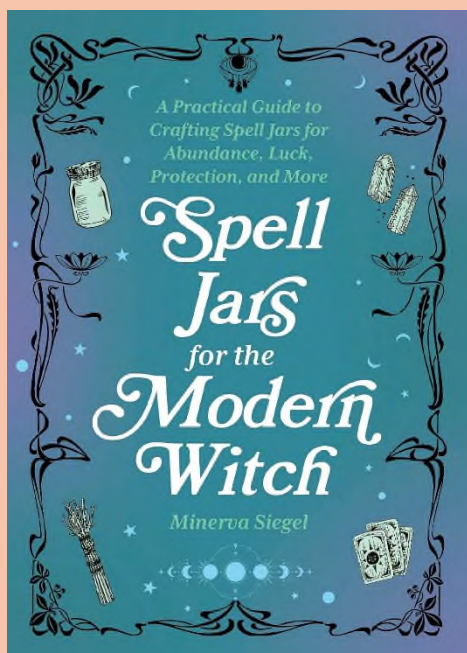

We suspect the Disney Store websites do not advertise their extensive stock of Tarot cards at this time because they do not want parents to know about them. Once a child hears of their existence, however, he will know where to find them.

Blurb on Amazon regarding the Disney Villains Tarot Deck:

“Including both the Major and Minor Arcana, the set also comes with a helpful guidebook with explanations of each card's meaning, as well as simple spreads for easy readings. Packaged in a sturdy, decorative gift box, this devious deck of tarot cards is the perfect gift for Disney fans and tarot enthusiasts everywhere.”

Disney markets 8 core Tarot decks in all, in a variety of formats – standard box sets, tiny tin editions, 'funko' pop variants, and deluxe gift sets:

- Disney Villains Tarot
- The Nightmare Before Christmas Tarot
- Alice in Wonderland Tarot
- Hocus Pocus Tarot
- Disney Fairies Tarot
- Agatha All Along Tarot
- The Haunted Mansion Tarot
- Star Wars Tarot

The book, Spell Jars for the Modern Witch, was published in 2023. The author, Minerva Siegel, is both a practising witch and author of several of the Guidebooks on Tarot published by Disney.

The blurb on Amazon states: “Spell Jars for the Modern Witch will guide you through the entire process of jar spellcrafting – creating spells inside sealed containers – from setting your intentions, to cleansing your ritual space, to building and activating your spells.”

m*Alice in Wonderland

For hesitant parents who want to give a ‘cute’ introduction to Tarot to their son or daughter, Disney markets an edition based on Alice in Wonderland.

It only uses graphics based on these characters. Nevertheless it is a complete Tarot deck in the traditional sense, with all 78 cards.

It also comes with a detailed 128 page booklet written by Minerva Siegel, who claims to be a witch.

Tarot is but one of these enticements, but a very popular one. One research institute found that half of all Americans aged 13-25 engage in “tarot cards or fortune telling”. This is a deeply disturbing statistic, a sign that the growing fascination with demons is leading more and more people into behavior that threatens the survival of their soul.

For anyone who is already in bondage to Tarot and the terrible attraction that the occult exercises over those who are spiritually vulnerable, we urge immediate action. Kneel by your bed and ask Jesus to set you free. He has that power! Repent of your foolishness, admit to Christ that you took the wrong path and that you want to mend your ways and live by his holy law. Demons hate the very name of Jesus, so use it!

Great is his mercy!

Then adjourn to a safe place and burn your Tarot deck and all occult paraphernalia in your home. Be ruthless about this.
