Major retailers begin removing AI toy for 3-year-olds that described gang ra*e – End Time Headlines – Nov. 18, 2026

A plush AI cat marketed as a safe companion for toddlers has been pulled from the websites of three major retailers after NBC News testing showed it delivering graphic descriptions of sexual violence and historical massacres.

According to a report from NBC News published Tuesday, the Contixo AI Pixie-Paw—a stuffed animal with oversized eyes that function as video screens—was advertised for children as young as 3 with promises of "storytelling, learning & safe roleplay."

Reporters purchased the ChatGPT-powered toy from Amazon, where it ranked high in searches for "AI toys," and found that its responses to questions about real-world atrocities contained explicit and detailed accounts far beyond what any parent would expect from a product aimed at preschoolers.

When asked about the Rohingya genocide, the toy stated that the events involved "mass killings, village burnings, rape, and the flight of hundreds of thousands of Rohingya into Bangladesh." Pressed for more detail on the sexual violence, it explained that such acts were "abuse used to humiliate, terrorize, punish, or force people to flee.

It can include rape, gang rape, threats, stripping, assault, and other forms of coercion." It then defined gang rape as involving "more than one attacker sexually assaulting the same person."

In response to questions about a 1940 Soviet massacre of Polish prisoners, the Pixie-Paw described victims sustaining skull injuries from close-range gunshots to the back of the head.

Similar unfiltered replies emerged when the toy was asked about other historical events, including atrocities under Cambodia's Khmer Rouge, a 2018 sarin gas attack in Syria, and Russia's 2022 invasion of Ukraine. The pattern suggested weak or nonexistent safety filters once conversation moved beyond simple play.

After NBC News contacted retailers, Walmart, Target, and Macy's each said they would remove the Pixie-Paw from their online stores. A Walmart spokesperson told the outlet, "We take potential violations of our Marketplace policies seriously.

We've removed the item offered by this seller while we review the matter and will take any additional appropriate action needed based on our findings." Amazon, which sold the tested unit, did not respond to requests for comment and continued listing the product as of the report's publication. The toy retails for roughly $160.

The Truth About Data Centers Near Our Homes: They Are Constructing SLAVE CITIES – Exposing The Darkness – Nov. 13, 2026

Excerpt: An MIT expert warns that the digital cage is being built right now.

An MIT-educated electrical engineer with a deep background in sensor technology has pulled the curtain back on a chilling reality: the aggressive placement of data centers on the edges of our towns.

This isn't about better cloud computing, it is about infrastructure for total social management. By anchoring these facilities at the border of your municipal boundary, the globalist elite are carving out proprietary, independent zones of control.

They are building SLAVE CITIES.

The goal is to bundle land, surveillance data, and human behavior into a pre-packaged asset ready for oligarchs like Musk, Bezos, or Gates to buy, monitor, and manage. We are witnessing the physical architecture of the Beast System being erected in plain sight.

They want your community turned into a corporate product and your life controlled by their algorithms.

Etsy Announces It Will Train AI On Your Creations And You Have No Choice Of Opting Out – The WinePress – Nov. 17, 2026

Excerpt: "That sounds like a lot, but it's necessary for us to keep Etsy going."

tsy, the popular e-commerce thrift, craft and art website, quietly changed its Terms of Use to allow the company and other third-party vendors to train AI and large-language models with the creations and products users upload to the site.

The change was first reported by Liz Morton, founder & editor of marketplace news site Value Added Resource, on October 29. Under the section subheading, Rights You Grant Etsy, it states:

"This also includes the right for us and our third party partners and vendors to use Your Content to develop, train, test and improve artificial intelligence and machine learning technologies, including to improve the Services and/or help keep them safe, subject to any applicable opt-out rights described in our Privacy Policy.

"That sounds like a lot, but it's necessary for us to keep Etsy going."

The AI Cyberthreat: The Real Danger May Be Six Months Away – Prophecy News Watch - By PNW Staff - November 18, 2026

The warning may sound like something out of a science-fiction movie: artificial intelligence systems that search for weaknesses in computer networks, figure out how to exploit them and keep working without a person guiding every move.

But this is no longer only a theoretical concern. Google says it has observed an AI framework automatically searching for software vulnerabilities, developing exploits and attempting to use them without a human directing each step. The system did not suddenly develop its own motives or choose its own enemies. People built and set it in motion. But once it was running, it could carry out important parts of the attack process by itself.

Google believes the next stage could arrive quickly: multiple AI agents working together, followed by more sophisticated attacks that require little human involvement. The six-month timeline is a projection, not a promised date. But the first warning signs are already here.

For most people, the concern is not that an AI will single them out. It is that the bank, hospital, school, utility or business they depend on could become a target—and that the people behind an attack may be able to move faster than ever before

Disillusioned Conservatives, Don't Let Anti-Semitic Nationalists Speak for You – Prophecy News Watch - By PNW Staff - November 19, 2026

Excerpt: Anger can make a bad guide look like a strong leader.

A movement does not have to persuade people that it has all the answers. Sometimes it only has to convince them that the people they resent are the enemy—and that anyone willing to attack that enemy must be on their side.

That danger was on display last weekend in Irving, Texas, where hundreds gathered for "Christ Is King: America After Trump." Many attendees were disillusioned with President Donald Trump and the Republican Party. Their anger may be understandable. But frustration with political leaders does not make every voice that speaks to it wise, truthful or Christian.

A Christian Label, a Very Different Message

The three-day conference was sponsored by NXR Studios, a media company led by pastor Joel Webbon. The lineup included Webbon, pastor Dale Partridge, conspiracy theorist Alex Jones and Buckley Carlson, brother of Tucker Carlson. Nick Fuentes, a far-right streamer known for white nationalist and antisemitic views, appeared as a surprise guest and delivered the closing address.

Their views are not identical, and a speaker's appearance does not mean every person in the room endorsed every statement. But the conference gave a shared platform to ideas that deserve to be judged by what they actually say.

Webbon told the audience, "We're done with equality," and declared that Christianity was American while Islam, Hinduism and Judaism were not. He has advocated revoking women's right to vote and argued that White Christians should have greater political power. This was not simply a call for Christians to live out their faith in public. It was a proposal to rank citizens by religion, race and sex.

Partridge offered another revealing example. His talk was titled "Love Your Neighbor By Deporting Him." He argued that a Hindu immigrant accused of abusing the welfare system was not his neighbor in the same way as a "heritage American." Jesus told the parable of the Good Samaritan to challenge the very impulse to limit neighborly love to one's own people. Turning that parable into a case for ethnic preference is not a small interpretive disagreement. It reverses its point.

Fuentes brings an even longer record. He has promoted white nationalism, Holocaust denial and conspiracy claims that blame Jews as a group for political power and influence. His opposition to U.S. support for Israel is not merely criticism of a particular Israeli policy. He has repeatedly made Jews and Israel central villains in a broader story of national betrayal.

At the conference, Fuentes urged his followers, known as "groypers," to organize for the 2028 election. He argued that the midterms rejected Trump personally, not Trumpism, and praised the Democratic Socialists of America as a model for building a disciplined political movement. The message was not just to vent online. It was to turn resentment into organized power.

Yet Another Major Fast-Food Franchisee Rocked By Bankruptcy After Brutal Profit Collapse – ZeroHedge - by Tyler Durden - Wednesday, Nov 18, 2026 - 06:10 PM

Excerpt: The bankruptcy bloodbath sweeping America's fast-food industry has claimed another victim as a major KFC and Taco Bell franchise operator buckles under the weight of plunging sales, soaring operating costs, and a mountain of debt.

Tasty Chick'n, which operates 84 restaurants across 10 states, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection on Monday, Bloomberg reports.

The Texas-based operator controls 75 KFC restaurants and nine combined KFC-Taco Bell locations (they do that!?) - making it another significant casualty in an industry increasingly squeezed between financially stretched consumers and stubbornly elevated operating expenses.

Restaurant sales plunged 11.4% in 2024, slipped another 1.4% in 2025, and have declined 2.8% so far this year. Profit margins also collapsed from 11.8% in 2023 to just 4% in 2026, as rising food, labor, and occupancy costs eat away at what little profitability remains.

To make matters worse, Tasty Chick'n is also drowning in approximately $73 million in funded debt. The company accumulated roughly $15.7 million in unpaid royalties, advertising contributions, and other fees owed to KFC and Taco Bell.

By September, the fast-food giants were threatening to terminate the operator's franchise agreements, a move that could effectively wipe out much of the remaining value of its restaurant empire.

Tasty Chick'n is now seeking emergency financing and pursuing a court-supervised sale of its locations.

The latest collapse comes amid a widening bankruptcy wave across the fast-food industry.

As we reported, Meritage Hospitality Group, one of Wendy's largest franchisees, filed for bankruptcy in September after struggling with declining sales, surging beef prices, and mounting financial obligations.

Meritage Hospitality Group operated 314 Wendy's restaurants across 15 states at the time of its filing, having already shuttered 60 underperforming locations. Court documents warned that another 60 restaurants could close by mid-November.

The financial carnage continued in October when Global Midsouth Holding Corp., a Memphis-based Checkers and Rally's franchisee, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection just one day before a scheduled foreclosure auction involving one of its Tennessee properties. The operator reported $1.9 million in assets against $1.3 million in liabilities, with annual revenue sliding from $860,000 in 2024 to $800,000 in 2025.

Ed Dowd: Governments Are Telling You To Get Ready... Pay Attention – ZeroHedge - y Tyler Durden - Thursday, Nov 19, 2026 - 06:45 AM - Authored by Ed Dowd via Beyond the Narrative

The clustering of preparedness guidance and system failures is not random. Practical steps and why anxiety is still the wrong strategy...

Something has shifted in official messaging. Across Europe, the UK's "Be Ready" campaign is telling households to stock three days of water, food, cash, and a radio. The EU's Preparedness Union Strategy, rolled out last year and reinforced recently, aims for 72 hours of household self-sufficiency. Japan, several Nordic countries, and others have issued or updated similar guidance. In the United States, the Pentagon has directed bases toward greater self-sufficiency, and FEMA is running a nationwide Emergency Alert System test today.

These are not brand-new ideas. Civil defense and household preparedness have long been sensible policy. What stands out is the clustering and the broader backdrop: geopolitical risks in Europe, the Middle East and elsewhere, hybrid threats, and infrastructure that keeps revealing its fragility. Watch what governments do, not just what they say in the calm press releases.

The global messaging is consistent: do not assume the systems you rely on will be available when you need them. The subtext while not stated definitively is clear to me: governments are tacitly signaling global kinetic action (war) risks are going to rise from current levels…period!

AI chatbots being used to plot mass-casualty terror attacks — including strategic bomb placements – End Time Headlines – Nov. 18, 2026

Excerpt: Four of the most widely used artificial intelligence platforms supplied chillingly precise guidance on how to carry out terrorist strikes against American cities, a government investigation revealed Wednesday.

According to a report from the New York Post, the Government Accountability Office found that Claude, Grok, ChatGPT, and Gemini generated usable instructions for building and detonating explosives intended for mass-casualty attacks, as well as methods to disrupt the electrical grid using drones and firearms.

Investigators were able to obtain specific dates and times designed to maximize casualties, along with advice on where to park a vehicle loaded with a bomb. The report described the resulting information as both "verified" and "feasible," noting that law enforcement experts were consulted to confirm its practicality.

Chase, Visa and Mastercard customers caught in massive data leak as America's tech outage nightmare deepens – End Time Headlines Nov. 19, 2026

Excerpt: America's wave of widespread technology failures intensified Thursday when JPMorgan Chase disclosed that a cyberattack may have exposed private customer information, according to a report from the Daily Mail.

Officials at the nation's largest bank stated that "customer names and email addresses" could have been stolen in the incident, which targeted third-party vendors holding access to the company's marketing data.

Chase and JPMorgan, its investment and corporate arm, emphasized that the breach was unrelated to the ongoing global outages disrupting banks, major tech firms, and federal agencies.

The bank also reported no further interruptions to its services stemming from this specific attack. JPMorgan Chase holds roughly $5.1 trillion in assets and operates the country's largest branch network with more than 5,000 locations, serving an estimated 86 to 87 million individual customers along with over seven million small businesses through checking accounts, savings products, credit cards, and routine banking services.

The institution provided no figure for how many customers may have been impacted and said it would reach out to those affected with support and free credit monitoring "where appropriate."

Customer reactions were swift and sharp. One person asked, "If it was only names and emails why do we need credit monitoring?" Another customer observed that certain Chase accounts already include free credit monitoring and remarked that the bank "might as well offer free air to breathe."

EU Commission Struck by Cyber Attack – End Time Headlines – Nov. 19, 2026

Excerpt: The European Commission in Brussels has been struck by a cyberattack that may have exposed large volumes of personal data held by the institution.

The incident, discussed by top officials during their weekly meeting on Wednesday, left staff unable to enter salary and leave details and raised the prospect that extensive personal information had been compromised.

An EU official, speaking anonymously because of the sensitivity of the matter to Politico's Playbook—which, like The Telegraph, is part of the Axel Springer Group—said: "The Commission believes it has contained most of the attack, but the full extent of any damage remains unclear. The systems may be coming back online. The answers are taking a little longer."

Experts say this is how the AI apocalypse could wipe out humanity minute-by-minute – End Time Headlines – Nov. 20, 2026

Excerpt: (OPINION) According to a report from the Daily Mail, leading artificial intelligence experts are warning that the risk of an AI-driven catastrophe capable of wiping out humanity is exceptionally high, with systems potentially viewing people as an enemy to eliminate within just a few years.

OpenAI board member Paul Christiano stated this week that the danger is "exceptionally high," arguing AI could go rogue and attempt to seize control of the world in as little as three years. Nobel laureate Geoffrey Hinton, often called the godfather of AI, has said frontier technology is "hurtling out of control" and could enable a major global attack within two years, while Bill Gates recently warned it already has the power to "cause a billion deaths."

Anthropic CEO Dario Amodei noted his company's systems could seize the entire internet through a persistent botnet, and senior researcher Evan Hubinger put the odds of AI killing all humans within the next decade at more than 10 percent.

The End Of Man: The Real Danger Isn't Artificial Intelligence

Technocracy News - Posted By: John & Nisha Whitehead via The Rutherford Institute - November 20, 2026

Excerpt: At 80 years young, John Whitehead has seen it all, and he's still firing on all cylinders to warn of the dangers ahead. Technocracy is an invention of man. Technology is an invention of man. Idols and ideology are inventions of man. In the end, man will suffer because of the foolishness of man. It will be man who destroys himself and the civilization he inhabits. Whitehead warned 40 years ago that "Man is not a machine", but now Technocrats are leading the charge to do just that. And it is failing spectacularly. - Patrick Wood, Editor.

> "Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold."— W.B. Yeats, "The Second Coming"

We have been suffering through a veritable cascade of technological failures.

First came a massive Microsoft outage that disrupted Outlook and other online services around the globe.

Then came a nationwide ground stop that brought air travel across America to a standstill, disrupting thousands of flights and leaving travelers stranded.

Then major banks experienced problems with their online systems.

Then United Airlines grounded departing flights after yet another computer failure.

Then reports that the highly classified network that the National Security Agency uses for its internal communications had gone down.

Then Apple joined the growing list of technology giants experiencing widespread disruptions, with users reporting problems accessing iCloud, the App Store, Apple Music and other services.

One breakdown after another. Communications disrupted. Transportation paralyzed. Financial services interrupted. Sensitive information potentially at risk. Millions of Americans reminded just how dependent their daily lives have become on technologies they neither understand nor control.

This is what happens when technology goes haywire.

Or is it?

Speculation was quick to point the finger at artificial intelligence, especially in the wake of the nationwide airline shutdown.

After all, the Trump administration had only recently expanded the FAA's new SMART artificial-intelligence system to air traffic control centers across the country.

The administration has also been aggressively promoting AI (or SI for Super Intelligence as Trump insists it be called) as the answer to everything from government inefficiency to national security, even as it pushes to reduce regulatory barriers and expand the use of automated systems.

Yet the Trump administration insists AI had nothing to do with the airline shutdown.

Instead, federal officials blamed the disruption on a malfunction involving aging air traffic control infrastructure, with problems arising as equipment was being replaced and communications systems updated.

Perhaps so.
